

Euro 2020 Final Analysis

Michael Lucio

Overview

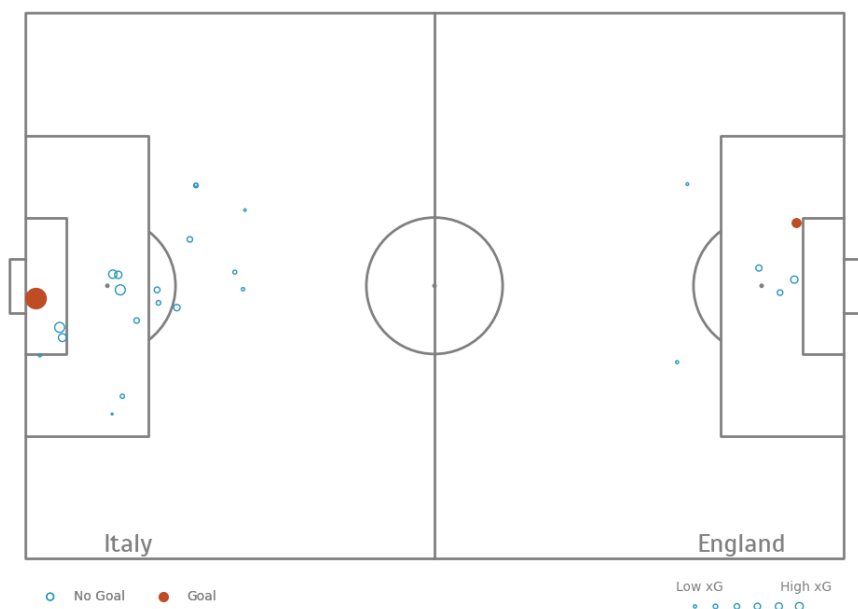

For this project, we will analyze the final match of the UEFA Euro 2020 Championships between England and Italy.

This was a very close match from the beginning. The match started off right away with a goal from England in the first couple of minutes. From there Italy slowly wake up, until they eventually score after the 60th minute. Overall, Italy was the dominate team, after their slow start in the first half, having the most chances and shots. England managed to stay in the game but were unlucky in the Penalty Shootout. In the end, Italy gets their well-deserved win.

EURO 2020 Final Shotmap

Excludes Penalties

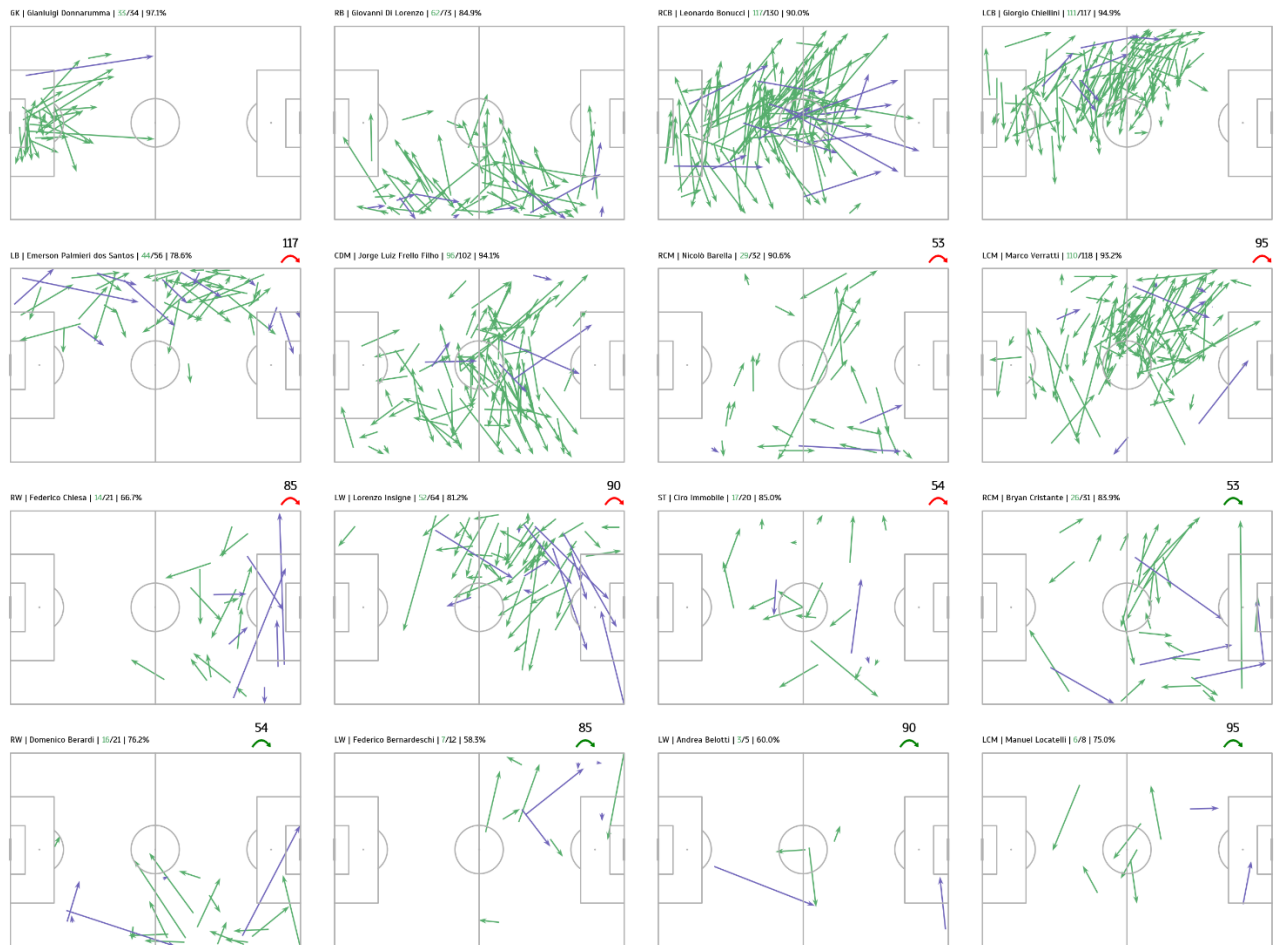

Italy Analysis

Italy's keys to success were their wing-play and Jorginho's possession. From pass maps we can see how much the wingers touched the ball and were replaced with fresh substitutes to keep it going. We can also see how well Jorginho controls the midfield alongside Veratti and as they both find passing options.

Italy Pass Maps vs England

Player Pass Maps: exclude throw-ins only

England Analysis

After Luke Shaw scored early on, it seemed England slowed down. They had good central play with Declan Rice and Calvin Phillips as the double pivots, but their attackers were nowhere to be seen. Early substitutions from Italy, and late substitutions from England seemed to biggest difference between the sides. England lost control of the game but were fortunate to stay in the game throughout extra time.

England Pass Maps vs Italy

Player Pass Maps: exclude throw-ins only

